

Band: MORGUE
Country: Canada
Title: Dethroned
Label: Self-released
Year: 2011
Style: Black Death Metal

Review:

Second full-length album from the Canadian Morgue (there are lots and lots of Morgue bands around the world), Dethroned is made of 9 tracks totaling almost 45 minutes of Black Death Metal as on the first, previously reviewed, album, but this time I feel the music is more brutal and less groovy. Unfortunately their music although sounding curdled and quite solid, becomes part of the nowadays Black Death trend trying to be as aggressive and shocking as possible. Well, it gets dull after a while, so I was less impressed by Dethroned than I was by their debut, and still almost 3 years passed since this second album was released, it's about time for a third, I'm curious how that will sound. In conclusion Dethroned is an ok Black Death album, but lacks the catchiness of Flames and Blood.
